AS A MAN SOWETH
By ADA BORDEN STEVENS

"DO TAKE up the baby, Clay! I know you hate to, but he cries so I can't go on with the cooking. Supper will be ready in a minute." Katherine turned an anxious, flushed face from the toast she was buttering. It was just the kind Clayton Alden liked best.

All the boys envied Clayton when he married Kay. She had been a bright girl in college, and a favorite at all the dances. Clayton went off triumphantly with the rare prize. For five successive years he had come back nightly to her to rest after a struggling day in town; years in which he took her sacrifices for his business interests as a matter of course. She would have helped him with his problems if he had allowed.

She loved her home and his protection. She delighted in making the best of what he had, and supplementing it with her own craft. She gloriied in the two little Aldens that had come to them. Baby Kenwood was the one directly on her mind at present. Junior was happy with a tiny hammer and an old box in the corner of the kitchen.

Clayton admitted the fascination of his little family, but, frankly, he considered that a woman's work was the care of her own house and children. Whatever Puritan outcropping this was, it grew with exercise. The children were too young to interest him much; at this age they seemed alien. Katherine managed beautifully. He left them to her, and expected her to leave his cares to him. Long pre-occupied silences entered his routine. Out of them he would come volubly to hustle them all into the motor he felt it necessary to own, and go on some grand picnic. Katherine tired, uneasy, had ceased asking, but secretly planned some new economy to pay for these indulgences.

Reluctantly, he picked his young son up and held him awkwardly. Kay certainly tended to spoil the kids as they grew older! However, that was her affair, only he did not wish to be too frequently a victim. If her days were monotonous, he did not realize it, feeling gratefully the restfulness of home. Once a week a kindly neighbor stayed with the children, releasing her to companion him socially. He did not know the extra work this meant—the planning for time and clothes. He came to take these days for granted, too.

Supper over, Kay went to put the babies to bed, a heavy child on each arm. Going to look for her after an unusual silence, Clay found her lying white, unconscious, across the bed.

"Kay, dear! Katherine! What on earth's the matter? Come, get undressed, and into bed." He felt injured that she paid no attention to him. She did not rouse. Alarmed at last, he telephoned for Doctor Ross.

An hour passed before she opened her eyes, took the dose and fell off to sleep. Clay left her grudgingly as the doctor beckoned him. Once in the sitting room the doctor's benign look dropped from him. He turned sternly to the young man.

"Don't you know that you are killing your wife?" he cried. "A woman's work, hey? Well, so it is; but the children are yours, aren't they? You can't afford to hire much help, can you? Mrs. Alden never complains, does she? No, I know blamed well she doesn't. Now she came to me a week ago and I told her to be careful! Have you helped her to be careful? Have you? She's in for a good long rest at last."

Clayton felt crushed. To lose Katherine—! But Doctor Ross went on, "Oh, she'll get well—if you take care of her. Woman's work! Man's work! Bah! Get together, Alden. Katherine's got a better head than you; talk your business over with her; it will be the better for it. She needs your problems, you need hers. If you don't work together, in ten years you'll wake up to find you are stranded on different shores." The physician turned calmly, "Send her to her mother tomorrow."

Clayton was no fool, but his head swam with new ideas, driven in by no soft, gloved hand such as Kay had tried to use. "I say, doctor," Clayton's mind ran ahead to the anxious nights that would be his if he hadn't the daily sight of Kay's sweet face and reassuring smile; the silent house without the little ones—"couldn't her mother come here?"

The doctor wheeled to look at him, Clay stammered an answer to the unspoken question:

"I—could—help with the children—nights—"

The benign smile came back as Doctor Ross replied heartily. "By all means, I'll see her in the morning."

The kindly neighbor sat with the sleeping Katherine while Clayton speeded into the country, where Kay's mother innocently felt so remote from the tiny apartment in town. When Katherine woke again it was to feel the familiar, competent presence of the woman who had taught her home-craft. She put out her hand gratefully, but with the other hand she drew Clayton's anxious face to hers, for she was too wise not to know by what a soul-searching process this miracle had been performed.

Different Reasons.
At several weddings recently it has been noticed that thin-clad brides were favored with cold. It is not the bride's dress that makes the bride-

Boy Scouts Found Child Who Was Lost During Big Day of the Fair Last Year

About 5:30 o'clock on Thursday of the fair last fall a W. C. T. U. woman stopped Blaine Thomas and myself, telling us that a little girl about five years old had been lost, and that her mother had been hunting for two hours for her, but had been unable to find her. She had been looking for a Boy Scout to help her, but was unable to find one, for she said, "If anyone can find her a Boy Scout can." We decided then not to disappoint her. First, we made three trips around the fair grounds, each going in different directions, asking about the child, giving the description of the woman had given us, but had no success until we reached the main entrance, where a lady told us that a child answering the description had just crawled into a car which went out toward Sixth street. When we got to Sixth and Philadelphia streets we asked the policeman about the little girl. He told us he had seen a little girl going out toward Chevy Chase, so we hurried out that way and found the little girl playing along the street car tracks. She was crying when we found her, so we carried her back to the fair grounds and gave her to her father. It was dusk by this time and we were very tired and hungry, but it was worth every bit of it to see how thankful that father was to find his little girl.

In Memoriam

In memory of our darling, Dorothy Gertrude, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clair Pounds, of Penn Run, who passed out of this life into the great beyond on June 5, 1923, at the age of three years, six months and 11 days:

Such a little break in the sod,
So tiny a little grave,
Oh, how soon can we surrender to God
The beautiful gift He gave.

Oh, how we did love our darling,
But God still loved her more,
And sent his shining angels
To take our darling over.

Her little eyes are closed in death,
Her face we will see no more,
But her little voice is still ringing in our ears,
Behold, I am alive forevermore,
She is not dead, but sleeping.

—Grandmother.

In Memoriam

In memory of Editha Belle Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Smith of Clymer, who died one year ago; More and more each day we miss you,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But they little know the sorrow
That is within our hearts concealed.
Peaceful be thy rest, dear Editha,
It is sweet to breathe thy name;
In life we loved you dearly,
In death we do the same.

Dear Editha, how we long for you.

Holstein Sale

The Holstein sale held at the fair grounds on Friday was considered generally satisfactory. Prices were not as high as some expected. Twenty-five head were sold for $2,795, making an average of $112 each. However, many of these were young, unbred heifers. The sale was topped by a three year old heifer, Queen Dale Korndyke Walker, consigned by the Cream Rose Dairy Farm, Livermore. This heifer was purchased by R. E. Young, Indiana, at $255. Col. Baxter, of Elmira, N. Y., was the auctioneer.
