Will Offers No Excuses To Heirs

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Gene Fowler left a will in which he offered no apologies to his heirs "for the fact that I have given such small attention to the material prizes of the world."

The will, written in 1955 by the famed newspaperman turned biographer and novelist, was filed in Probate Court Monday.

"There comes a time in the life of every artist," the document said, "when he must choose between the objectives of moneyed ease and—or the sure prospect of lonely struggle and sacrifice and lack of recognition until he grows old or is dead. The latter choice was mine, and my only regret is that I am unable to insure the financial protection of my beloved wife, Agnes."

Fowler, who died July 2 at 70, left everything to his widow. His estate was described as real and personal property worth more than $10,000.

Although he wrote the will nearly five years before his death, he said in it that "the Grim Reaper has sharp elbows and is nudging me."

SERVICE CLUBS

Homer City Kiwanis

HOMER CITY—Homer City Kiwanis Club met last night at its roadside rest project, east of Brush Valley along Route 56.

After a picnic supper, Kiwanis members cleared out underbrush. The area has now taken on a more finished look.

The club hopes to have permanent signs erected in the near future and some shale spread on pathways.

Several Kiwanians' wives were present at the meeting.

It has been learned that motorists are already beginning to use the two picnic tables even though the final touches to the area haven't been completed.

Next week's meeting will be directed by George Zamiskie and will be held in the Hotel Homer dining room.

Indiana Kiwanis

A round table meeting was conducted by the Indiana Kiwanis last evening for 43 members.

Lou McGill sounded the opening gong and led in the singing of "America."

A Ladies Night is planned for Wednesday evening when Kiwanis members and their wives will have dinner at Rustic Lodge and attend the play at the Theater-by-the-Grove at Indiana State College.

Bid Halted To Cancel Sugar Quota

PANAMA (AP)—The Panamanian government has rejected a suggestion by nationalists that it cancel an increase in its sugar export quota to the United States.

An official spokesman said that Panama negotiated the increase last year and it had nothing to do with the U. S.-Cuban dispute.

The agreement was condemned by a group of 30 Panamanians, among them nationalists Aquilino Boyd and Ernesto Castellero Pimentel, who sparked last November's campaign to plant the Panamanian flag in the U. S. Canal Zone.

The letter said the increased quota, from 3,600 tons to 10,000, was part of Washington's plan for "economic aggression" against Cuba.

matter of FACT

The people of 14th-century Venice were frightened. A mysterious disease was stalking the city. It seemed to be coming from the harbor. In coming ships were forced to observe a 40-day isolation period. Isolation of this sort came to be called "quarantine" from the Italian word "quaranta," meaning "forty." The Venetian quarantine failed. The mysterious disease was the Black Death, which killed 25 million people in three horrible years.

Fish Group Plans Study Of Fishways

HARRISBURG (AP)—The State Fish Commission is going ahead with a full-scale study for developing fishways on the Susquehanna River.

In the next year the commission plans to spend an estimated $47,600 to determine the best means of providing fish passage around dams on the Lower Susquehanna.

The dams, built some 25 years ago, have shut off access to the upper river of bass, shad and eels.

The commission authorized the study Monday after receiving a report on a preliminary survey conducted by Milo C. Bell, an engineering consultant, and Harlan B. Holmes, a biological consultant.

In presenting the report, Dr. A. S. Hazzard, assistant executive director, said the consultants felt "at least one full year's study of the peration of the existing dams and their effects on the river is needed to determine the proper location and operation of the fishway system at each dam."

"It might be necessary," Hazzard said the consultants advised, "to transfer a very large number of adults (shad) to various points above the four dams and also possibly to artificially propagate shad and release the small fish at various points up river."

He said the consultants will study fishways which now pass shad successfully.

The first fish passage experiments and initial engineering studies will be started at the Conowingo Dam, southernmost of the four dams which block the passage of migratory fish from the Chesapeake Bay, said Hazzard.

He noted that the survey team felt that "whatever fish passage facilities are developed for shad also will be suitable for other species (striped bass, eel, etc.)."

The survey's cost does not include the expense of experimental fish transportation facilities that would be installed at Conowingo nor the cost of operating the facilities, Hazzard said.

He outlined these five possible approaches to fish passage: (1) Fishways on fish ladders at each dam; (2) Traps for taking fish and passing them upstream by mechanical means; (3) Fish locks at each structure; (4) Possible combinations of the methods; (5) Hauling the fish around the dams or building canals around the dams.

In other business, the commission completed a reorganization by naming Warren Singer, Tunkhannock R. D., Wyoming County, as its new administrative secretary. He will receive $7,407 a year.

Albert Day, a 62-year-old lifelong conservationist from Portland, Ore., pledged to improve the agency's public relations when he takes over Aug. 1 as executive director at $14,000 a year. He currently is executive director of the Oregon Fish Commission.

He declined, in response to a question, to say whether commission meetings should be open to the public—a position that has been taken by sportsmen's groups. He noted, however, that "back in Oregon the meetings were open to the press."

The commission approved fishing regulations and seasons for another year with one minor exception. It said that from now on the Saturday nearest June 15, instead of June 15 will be the date for the start of warm water fishing.
